

A WIFELY LIMIT ON THE POKER GAME

Sam Pearsall Has a Chance to See Old Man Greenhut's Theories Put in Practice.

"There is reason for thinking the good Lord must have known what he was doing when he made women folks," said old man Greenhut as he leaned his elbows on the bar in his saloon and looked reflectively at Sam Pearsall. "But," he continued, "the good Lord is chock full of passages 't' pears to show 't' not even the Lord himself c'n quite understand what the critters is drivin' at half the time.

"I ain't a-sayin' but what there's good points about some 'em, but when it comes to havin' one f'r a wife I a-lays think o' what 'em Budd says to me one time when he had a carbuncle on the back of his neck. He says, 'Greenhut, I've had carbuncles on my neck an' my arms an' my legs an' my back till I reckon I know more about carbuncles 'n any other man in Arkansas, an' I've found out 't' there ain't but one good place for a carbuncle."

"Well, just natchally I ast him where that was, an' he says: 'The only real comfable place for to have a carbuncle is on the other feller's neck.' An' that's what most any man'll say about a woman."

"I ain't sayin' nothin' 't' I c'n't find no excellent woman there is. The only feller's wife."

"One thing, they sure do make a man wise. The good book says 't' the reason Solomon was the wisest man on earth was 't' he had three hundred wives an' seven hundred porcupines. Pears he use ter go an' stir up the porcupines an' see 'em bristle when he wanted a little rest an' recreation."

"I ain't sayin' nothin' 't' I c'n't find no excellent woman there is. The only feller's wife."

"Near I c'n make out, Pears I mustn't play no more draw poker," said the unfortunate husband.

"What?" exclaimed Greenhut and three or four others who were listening.

"Not play draw poker," repeated the old man. "Don't Miss Pearsall have no real sense o' what it means to fly into the face o' providence? He reckons he can't win."

THE PASSING OF REAL POKER

SOME COMMENTS ON THE DECADENT HARLEM GAME.

The weakness of the All Jacks, Small Limit Game Discussed by the Old Timer "Breathing" an Innovation of Which He Disapproves—Other Novelties.

"In an age in which nothing is held sacred from the Constitution to marriage, I suppose it is too much to expect that draw poker should be exempt from the pernicious activity of the reformer," said the gray haired young looking man, as he put his feet on the fender in the club smoking room. He continued:

"The mere fact that I'm personally aggrieved at the way this noble game is mis-played nowadays does not, as a matter of course, retard the march of progress appreciably, and I am resigning myself as best I can to the thought that the genuine game is likely soon to become extinct."

"I don't intend by any means," he continued, "to imply that there is any likelihood of draw poker dying out. On the contrary it is more likely to be increasing, but it is real sorrow to me to see the many changes that are being introduced from time to time and the general favor with which these changes are regarded by average players. It might be claimed that these changes are improvements, seeing that they meet with popular favor, but I think it can easily be shown that they are distinctly for the worse and that the game is deteriorating by reason of them. If that is true it is by no means impossible that draw poker will disappear after a time as other games have declined in favor because of having no vital interest."

Another of the party interrupted at this point. "We know you are an enthusiast," he said, "and we respect you for your earnest admiration of a game we all regard with respect, but don't you think you may be over-anxious about the well being of draw poker? It strikes me that you played more than ever in about the same way it has been played since I can remember."

"I hope I may be over-anxious," said the first speaker, "and I agree with you that the game is played nowadays more generally than ever, but it is certainly not played in anything like the same way it was twenty-five years ago, or so."

"I was playing in one of those nice, quiet, social games when you will find almost every night in almost every family circle in New York, north of Fifty-ninth street, when I ventured to say that I preferred straight poker to the 'all Jacks' game they were playing. You may not believe me when I tell you that not one player at a table knew what the ante game was. They were openly sceptical when I said the jackpot was a modern innovation."

"Of course, every student of the game knows that was right," said the second speaker. "The game was played by Gen. Schenck, somewhere about 1870, and no mention whatever of the jackpot."

"But you certainly would not maintain," said the interrupter, "that the jackpot is one of the modern changes that are likely to lead to the extinction of the game? To my mind an occasional jackpot adds greatly to the enjoyment of a sitting."

"I agree with you," said the first speaker. "The occasional jackpot certainly does add zest to the game, but playing all Jacks is something like eating a dish made entirely of red pepper. It is pungent enough, but the proper flavor is absent."

"The all Jack game seems to have been adopted on the theory that it makes the play higher, faster and more exciting, and I am not prepared to say that it would not accomplish this in a no limit game, or in a game where the stakes are high."

Then I opened a pot and as I sat next I stayed on my feet. I was playing a straight and a dropped. I took three cards and breathed, so I breathed after drawing one card and seeing that I had filled my flush. I looked at the cards. I was playing a straight and a dropped.
